[T.e.I.I. March Summary] Flip It Good! Flipping the LMS with an Open and Collaborative Platform

Contributed by Brett Griffiths, VCC

On March 22, Paul Hibbitts from SFU presented an excellent T.E.L.L. session entitled “Flipping the LMS with an Open and Collaborative Web Platform.”

Paul indicated he began teaching with Canvas in 2014, but discovered that he wasn't able to shape the LMS into a form that worked well for his course. While looking for ways ...

Online Course: Instructional Design in Adult Education

How do people learn? What is an effective instructional model? Instructional design is a complex process with its own history, body of literature, practitioners and research community. Effective instructional designers understand learning theories and the systems approach to training as well as the development process.

Offered through Continuing Studies at the University of Victoria, this completely online course on instructional design benefits all those responsible for providing learning opportunities to working professionals. This is a practical course, focusing on the application of theory to the practice of teaching and learning.
